Beyoncé was cited on May 5, 2016 and was caught attempting to thwart (to prevent someone from accomplishing something) speculation about her marriage with Jay Z. Even though she shouted out to her hubby Jay Z during the first night of her Formation World Tour on Wednesday, it didn't stop the alarms from sounding when people noticed the power couple had removed their wedding rings. Photographed backstage during the show, Beyoncé was notably missing her $5 million diamond rock. Some might say she was taking extra precautions while performing. However, the timing is a little too coincidental in relation to all the speculation surrounding the topic of infidelity on Lemonade an album Beyoncé had released on April 23, 2016 that's talks about her relationship with Jay Z. After the release of Beyoncé Lemonade album over the weekend, cheating started flying. Especially after fans heard the cryptic Lyrics on the visual album. But it looks like the couple of Jay Z and Beyoncé are still going strong because they were just spotted together in Miami. Photos show the couple sitting on the back of a golf cart together at Marlins Park, where Beyoncé is currently rehearsing for The Formation World Tour. After all this drama, Beyoncé and Jay Z had decided to remove their wedding rings but they will still be the close friends.

Now that we got in the latest Beyoncé news lets switch it up to sports. Dee Gordon, the reigning National League Batting Champion and an All-Star second baseman for the Miami Marlins, was suspended for 80 games because he tested positive for performance-enhancing drugs. Major League Baseball announced the suspension after the Marlins' victory in Los Angeles, saying that Gordon had tested positive for exogenous testosterone and clostebol.

Eight days before the MLB announced his suspension there was a same case for a player coming off the best season of his career. On April 22, Chris Colabello, an undrafted former independent leaguer who hit .321 for the Toronto Blue Jays last season, was also suspended for 80 games. Last season, though, Gordon hit .333 — 61 points above his career average as a Dodger — and also led the league in stolen bases and hits while winning a Gold Glove. The Marlins rewarded him with a five-year, $50 million contract in January, although he was to make just $3 million this season. He will not be paid during the suspension. Gordon, who dropped his appeal after Thursday's April 28 game — in which he drove in the tying run as the Marlins completed a four-game sweep of the Dodgers — issued a statement through the Players' Association Friday morning. He denied using banned drugs on purpose.
